CALL FOR YOUTH REPRESENTATIVE APPLICATIONS AND ART CONTEST SUBMISSIONS

August 14, 2014, deadline

First place winner of the 2013 Youth Art Contest, five to eight years of age category, by CIRI descendant Jadeliah Ann Dahl (parent Colleena Ketcham).

The future of CIRI lies in the hands of the next generation of shareholders and descendants. One of CIRI's priorities is to find new and exciting ways to engage young people and make the business and management of the company relevant to their lives.

To demonstrate to young people the importance of choosing the leaders they believe will best represent CIRI shareholders, CIRI Shareholder Participation Committee (SPC) members staff a youth voting booth at each year's Annual Meeting of Shareholders. Participating youth are eligible for prize drawings and receive one of two mock ballots: a simplified ballot for children from kindergarten to sixth grade, or a ballot patterned after CIRI's actual proxy form, available for teens aged 13 to 17. This year, 26 young shareholders and descendants participated in the mock election.

Based on discussions with the SPCs, in 2013, three youth representative positions were added to the SPC committees. CIRI is currently seeking applications from CIRI shareholders and descendants who are 13 to 17 years of age to fill the 2014 positions.

For younger CIRI shareholders and descendants who are 5 to 12 years of age, we are pleased to host an annual art contest.

CIRI ANNUAL MEETING

Incumbent Board members re-elected, shareholder participation results in $3,500 donation to homeless shelter, CIRI commemorates nonprofits

A crowd of more than 400 turned out for CIRI's 41st Annual Meeting of Shareholders June 7 at the Dena'ina Civic and Convention Center in Anchorage. The event featured a report from CIRI's President and CEO, a demonstration by Native Youth Olympic athletes and the election of five shareholders to serve on CIRI's 15-person Board of Directors.

"Participating in Board elections is one of the most important responsibilities associated with being a CIRI shareholder, and whether you own one share or 100, your vote counts."

– SOPHIE MINICH

The Inspector of Election has certified that CIRI shareholders re-elected five incumbent directors to serve three-year terms on the Board ending in 2017. Re-elected were Penny L. Carty, Robert E. Harris, Roy M. Huhndorf, Katrina M. Jacuk and Patrick M. Marrs. There were no advisory resolutions submitted at the meeting.

This year, CIRI offered to donate $1.00 to Anchorage's Brother Francis Shelter for every shareholder with a valid, active proxy (for any proxyholder or candidate) on file by the proxy deadline. CIRI plans to round up the amount paid to the shelter such that the 3,418 qualifying proxies result in a donation of $3,500.

"CIRI extends its sincere appreciation to the shareholders who participated in this year's Annual Meeting," said CIRI President and CEO Sophie Minich. "Participating in the Board elections is one of the most important responsibilities associated with being a CIRI shareholder," Minich continued, "and whether you own one share or 100, your vote counts. I am particularly pleased that the Brother Francis Shelter – an organization that provides temporary, emergency shelter to Anchorage's homeless population – will receive $3,500 on behalf of the many CIRI shareholders who participated in this year's election."

During the President's Report, Minich provided an overview of the company's financial performance, strategic plans and CIRI's efforts to engage shareholders, villages, tribes and other organizations that benefit Alaska Native people.

"From private equities to energy development to real estate projects, every investment and

A WORD FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sophie Minich, CIRI president and chief executive officer

The CIRI Annual Meeting held earlier this month provided a fantastic opportunity to meet and talk with shareholders. I appreciate those who took time out of their busy summer schedule to attend the event, participate in the Board election and hear about the latest developments at CIRI. I was especially pleased with the positive atmosphere and feedback we received from shareholders.

CIRI's five incumbent Board members were elected to serve another three years on the Board. Again, I appreciate all of the shareholders who voted in person or submitted their proxies for the election.

As you may have read in recent media coverage in Alaska, CIRI joined a coalition called "No One on One" with five other regional Native corporations to oppose a ballot measure that will be decided in Alaska's primary election on August 19, 2014. It is rare for CIRI to become publically involved in political issues, so I wanted to explain the reasoning behind the decision of our Board of Directors.

Ballot Measure 1 is a proposal to repeal the oil tax reform legislation passed by the Alaska Legislature in 2013. The 2013 tax reform law replaced a system enacted in 2007 that significantly increased the taxes oil and gas companies paid the state, particularly in times of high oil prices.

Production from Alaska's North Slope oil fields continue their steady decline, and new investment is needed to find fresh reservoirs and develop existing fields that are more expensive to produce.

Many of the effects of declining investment and oil production are masked by abnormally high oil prices, which allow the State of Alaska to maintain strong revenues and a budget surplus. However, whenever oil prices stabilize, our state will face a budget deficit. Oil revenues pay for roughly 90 percent of state spending on schools, roads, public safety and more.

With the passage of the 2013 oil tax reform, we have witnessed a resurgence of investment from oil companies. They are looking for new oil, employing new technology and hiring more contractors and employees. Since the reform was enacted, the companies have pledged more than $8 billion in new projects that could add more than 130,000 barrels a day of production. This winter, the North Slope had more drill rigs operating than ever before. Between 2013 and 2014 alone, ConocoPhillips Alaska's capitol budget increased from just over $1 billion to nearly $1.8 billion, and BP Alaska is reinvesting 90 percent of every dollar in Alaska. It's encouraging, and it demonstrates that the 2013 tax reform legislation is working as intended.

HIGHLIGHTS EVERY VOTE COUNTS

According to Get Out the Alaska Native Vote, it is estimated that Alaska Native people constitute 14 percent of the statewide adult population. If all Alaska Native people voted during a normal turnout year – in which 55 percent of non-Native individuals voted – approximately 25 percent of those at the polls would be Alaska Native. This voting bloc could be more powerful than the Republican vote, the Democratic vote and the non-partisan vote in Alaska.

If you live in Alaska and are not registered to vote, or need to update your voter registration record, visit www.election.alaska.gov. Voter registration applications are also available at CIRI Shareholder Relations.

CIRI investments include companies that work directly with oil and gas producers, such as Alaska Interstate Construction and Cruz Marine. These companies see direct benefits from increased activity, which helps CIRI's bottom line. In a broader sense, CIRI and many of our shareholders rely on a strong, vibrant Alaska economy. A healthy economy helps to ensure investments like the Tikahntu Commons Retail and Entertainment Center, the ConocoPhillips Office Complex and the new Fireweed Business Center increase in value and produce strong financial returns for the company.

In addition, oil production from ANCSA subsurface lands are an important source of 7(i) resource revenues shared among the Alaska Native corporations. Arctic Slope Regional Corporation's subsurface lands in the Kuparuk oil field have paid substantial 7(i) distributions over the years. The new investments proposed by the industry include additional developments at Kuparuk.

If the oil tax reform is repealed, our state could lose the momentum that we are witnessing today. That's why CIRI has decided to become a voice in the debate. We believe the prudent choice for the long-term prosperity of Alaska, and for CIRI, is to vote no on Ballot Measure 1.

CIRI is proud to join Arctic Slope Regional Corporation; Doyon, Limited; NANA Development Corporation; Bristol Bay Native Corporation and Bering Straits Native Corporation in the No One On One coalition.

Sophie Minich

Kassidy Whitley Keeping It Real

CIRI shareholder Kassidy Whitley isn't your typical beauty pageant contestant. The hair stylist and newly certified professional trainer dyes her short hair a vibrant shade of red and doesn't bother to hide her tattoos or piercings. But that didn't stop Renee Scott, director of the Miss Alaska United States pageant, from appointing 21-year-old Kassidy to be the next potential Miss United States.

"Just this New Year's, I was telling my mom it would be fun to do something different, something that would challenge me. Then this came along."

— KASSIDY WHITLEY

"Pageants have never really been my thing," Kassidy admits. But when Scott suggested Kassidy's unique look might help set a new trend in the pageant world, Kassidy leapt into the realm of crowns and sashes with both feet. "Just this New Year's, I was telling my mom it would be fun to do something different, something that would challenge me. Then this came along."

Being a trendsetter may be something of a genetic trait: Kassidy's grandmother, the late Rika Florence Murphy, who was an original CIRI shareholder, was the first recognized chief of the Kenaitze Indian Tribe. "As I got older and more into history, I understood what a big deal that was," says Kassidy, "and I definitely took more pride in being from Alaska."

The Anchorage-born contestant confesses that she sometimes wonders if she should conform a little to the traditional pageant image. "Maybe I need to dye my hair blonde? Or get extensions? Remove some piercings? Sometimes I want to mold into that image, but then I remember: As long as I keep real and true to who I am, everything else will fall into place."

Kassidy is competing on a platform of youth athletics, health and wellness. An athletic high schooler who enjoyed cheerleading, track and volleyball, she grew more interested in fitness as a young woman but didn't know enough about how to get the proper nutrition to bolster her exercise. It's a problem she also sees with the high school girls who regard her as a sort of big sister, and it's part of why she became a personal trainer.

"The girls are into cheerleading, but they'll tell me

SOUTHCENTRAL FOUNDATION REACHES HISTORIC SETTLEMENT WITH INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

A historic settlement agreement between Southcentral Foundation (SCF) and the U.S. Indian Health Service (IHS) will result in a one-time $96 million payment, plus $30 million in interest, to SCF from the federal government. The settlement ends a long-running dispute following SCF's claims that it had suffered substantial underpayments from the IHS since 1997. SCF first filed a legal claim to recover the costs in 2005, demanding that IHS pay the full amount of contract support costs owed to SCF to date. This settlement resolves all past claims.

"I personally thank President Obama for fulfilling his promise to settle contracts between Alaska Native and American Indian people and the government," said SCF President and CEO and CIRI shareholder Katherine Gottlieb. "I extend my thanks to Sen. Murkowski, Sen. Begich and Congressman Young for their exhaustive efforts over the years to press the Indian Health Service to expedite the settlement process and to resolve claims on a fair and just basis."

"Senators Cantwell (D-Wash.) and Tester (D-Mont.), as well as Congressman Calvert (R-Calif.), need to be recognized for their leadership in keeping a spotlight on these historic wrongs. And I thank IHS Acting Director Roubideaux for the collaborative approach IHS brought to this final settlement process."

The SCF Board of Directors will be undertaking a planning process to assess how best to use the settlement funds to enhance health care for customer-owners.

If you are a customer-owner and wish to provide feedback about improvements to SCF's health care system, please call SCF Customer Service at (907) 729-3299.

MABEL PIKE EDUCATIONAL CENTER GROUNDBREAKING CEREMONY

The Alaska Native Heritage Center officially broke ground on the new Mabel Pike Educational Center on May 9 with plans to open this fall. The ceremony was attended by Alaska Congressional delegates, Native leaders and other supporters; but more notably, the late Mabel Pike's family was in attendance.

The new center is named to honor the legacy of Tlingit Elder and founding board member Mabel Pike, who dedicated her life to creating Alaska Native art and sharing and teaching it to others, especially to Alaska Native youth.

The Educational Center is named in honor of Tlingit Elder Mabel Pike who dedicated her life to creating Alaska Native art and sharing and teaching it to others.

The community increasingly looks to the Alaska Native Heritage Center to provide a myriad of services, including cultural awareness education, school programs related to Alaska Native people, art and culture classes for schoolchildren and their teachers, indigenous language restoration, and the transfer of cultural knowledge from Alaska Native Elders to youths.

The construction of the Mabel Pike Educational Center will expand the Heritage Center's existing space to include three classrooms and administrative space for all staff to be under one roof, greatly increasing the capacity to meet the demands of the Heritage Center's ever-expanding programs. 🗨️

Through these and other activities, young shareholders and descendants can take the first steps to playing an active role in CIRI's success today, tomorrow and beyond.

Youth Representative Applications

The role of the SPC Youth Representative is to provide input to the SPC as it works with the corporation on issues or activities identified by the SPCs, the shareholders or the corporation. Any youth interested in serving as an SPC Youth Representative must be a CIRI shareholder or descendant and 13 to 17 years of age, and must submit (a) an application, (b) a letter of introduction, (c) a reference letter and (d) a short essay explaining why he or she wants to serve as a youth representative and what he or she knows about his or her Alaska Native heritage and about CIRI.

Youth representative applications must be received by CIRI by 5 p.m. Alaska Daylight Time on Aug. 14 to be considered. The application can be downloaded and printed at www.ciri.com or is available in the Shareholder Relations Department.

Completed packets received by the Aug. 14 deadline will be reviewed by a selection committee and winners will be contacted. Youth representatives will participate in a two-day

October 2014 SPC meeting, which is when new SPC members – brought on after the Annual Meeting of Shareholders – receive general information about CIRI and its affiliated nonprofit organizations. CIRI believes it will be useful for the youth representatives to hear this information and to have an opportunity to meet CIRI Board members and executive staff. In turn, CIRI leadership hopes to learn more about what is important to the next generation of shareholders.

Youth Art Contest Submissions

An interested CIRI shareholder or descendant who is 5 to 12 years of age may submit original artwork interpreting the theme "Cultural Diversity" and a completed entry form to CIRI to be entered in the 2014 Youth Art Contest. Winning entries will be displayed at the CIRI and The CIRI Foundation Friendship Potlatches this fall.

Youth Art Contest entry forms can be downloaded and printed at www.ciri.com and are also available in the Shareholder Relations Department. Completed art contest entry forms and submissions must be received by CIRI on or before 5 p.m. Alaska Daylight Time on Aug. 14. 📧

CITC YOUTH GET SPUN UP ABOUT FIRE ISLAND WIND

Anuqa: Wind. Saa: Sun. Two sources of great energy, capable of generating power for whole cities. On June 4, 13 campers from Cook Inlet Tribal Council's (CITC) Anuqa::Saa Energy of the Wind and Sun Camp visited CIRI to learn how wind power is harnessed by CIRI's Fire Island Wind project.

"CITC seeks to promote science, technology, engineering and mathematics education that's relevant to us as Alaska Native people."

– KRISTALYNN SCOTT

"On Monday, we designed windmill blades to lift loads of screws, so today we got to use what we learned from that to design turbine blades," said camper Lisa Paton, who participated in a mini-challenge concocted by CIRI employees. After learning about the development of Fire Island Wind, teams of campers competed to see who could devise the most effective turbine rotor blades for capturing wind power.

The five-day camp introduces students to the ways energy from the wind and sun can be tangibly seen as power output through activities like solar-powered car races.

"CITC seeks to promote science, technology, engineering and mathematics education that's relevant to us as Alaska Native people," explained CITC Schoolyard Academic Instructor Krystalynn Scott.

"Partnering with CITC is such a great way to engage Alaska Native youth," said Suzanne Gibson, CIRI senior director of energy development. "Today, we plant the seeds of interest with hands-on learning about CIRI's work. It cultivates a curiosity that could take hold and help prepare some of these kids to be tomorrow's leaders." 📧
