NordAq and Apache set to proceed on CIRI subsurface exploration and development

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service issued permits to two companies involved in oil and gas exploration and development in the Kenai National Wildlife Refuge. While the federal government owns the surface land in the refuge, CIRI owns the subsurface oil, gas and coal estate. NordAq Energy Inc. and Apache Alaska Corporation have lease and exploration agreements, respectively, with CIRI to look for and develop oil and natural gas resources from CIRI's subsurface estate.

NordAq Energy

In June, following a lengthy environmental impact statement process, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service signed a "record of decision" that gives NordAq the access corridor it wanted to the proposed Shadura development. The site is northeast of Nikiski in the wildlife refuge.

The agency considered a number of alternatives for road and pipeline access to the site, including a road coming from the Swanson River oil field to the east. NordAq stated that a road from the east would make the project too costly. In the end, the agency granted NordAq's favored alternative of a 4.3-mile access road coming from the northwest off of the Kenai Spur Highway at Captain Cook State Recreation Area.

In early 2011, NordAq successfully drilled a wildcat exploratory well at the site. While the company has not made clear the size of its apparent discovery, a report in Petroleum News said, "The tentative development plans suggest a find worthy of some excitement."

According to the agency's Record of Decision, the anticipated construction would take approximately 16 months and the project would potentially operate for 30 years. NordAq is still working with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to obtain a Clean Water Act 404 permit, which is necessary before construction can begin on wetlands.

Apache Corporation

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service also issued a special use permit to Apache Alaska Corporation to conduct a 3-D seismic survey on land in the northwestern part of the Kenai National Wildlife Refuge. The seismic program involves subsurface land that Apache has access via an exploration agreement it entered into with CIRI. Apache Corporation officials told Petroleum News they are excited about the opportunities, but are still working to determine when the survey will begin.

The survey will cover an area of more than 142,000 acres. It will be conducted during the winter and it is expected to take several winters to complete. Apache uses wireless nodal technology that takes advantage of satellite-based positioning so receivers can be placed independently without the need to cut seismic trails on land.

The surveyors will avoid areas where the seismic activities will disturb wildlife resources such as salmon streams or sensitive nesting areas. Equipment for the survey will be brought in by helicopter slings and snow machines will be the primary form of ground transportation. In the special use permit, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service found no significant environmental impact from the planned survey.

CIRI Golf Classic rewards community programs

CIRI Board Members Doug Fifer, Michael Boling and Erik Frostad and CITC President Gloria O'Neill prepare to tee off.

When volunteers arrived at Moose Run Golf Course early in the morning of Aug. 2 to begin setting up for the 30th Annual CIRI Golf Classic, they were greeted by an unwelcome surprise – rain. Not just a light drizzle, more like a pelting downpour. However, the concern evaporated when the rain dissipated and the clouds parted in time for the 7:00 a.m. tee time.

A word from the president

President's Message

By: Sophie Minich, CIRI president and chief executive officer

Wow! What a summer it has been here in Alaska – one of the brightest and warmest on record. It has been so rewarding to enjoy the long, sunny days that bring out the best of our beautiful region. As our Alaska shareholders can attest to after years of lukewarm summers – we deserve it!

Earlier this month, CIRI hosted its annual summer golf tournament to raise money for worthy charities and the weather did not disappoint. The tournament was held at the Moose Run Golf Course between Anchorage and Eagle River and we had an excellent turnout from our friends, business partners and dedicated volunteers.

This year marked a special anniversary of the CIRI Golf Classic. Thirty years ago, the tournament was started as a way to raise money for The CIRI Foundation to support the educational aspirations of original CIRI shareholders and their lineal descendants. Since then, the tournament has raised millions of dollars – not only for The CIRI Foundation – but for a number of other important charities that benefit our shareholders and community.

Thanks to the 144 players and generous corporate sponsors, the 30th CIRI Golf Classic raised more than $100,000 for three nonprofit organizations – Covenant House Alaska, Cook Inlet Tribal Council's ARISE program and the new Alaska Native Executive Leadership Program at Alaska Pacific University. From helping at-risk youth and providing them with tools to achieve their educational goals, to cultivating the next generation of Alaska Native executives, these programs fulfill the mission of the CIRI golf tournament that has not changed in 30 years – support youth and education.

Corporate citizenship is a core value at CIRI and illustrates the company's genuine concern for the welfare and long-term sustainability of the communities in which CIRI conducts business. CIRI's commitment to social responsibility and corporate giving is an investment with long-term benefits for our family of shareholders, employees and the larger Alaska Native population.

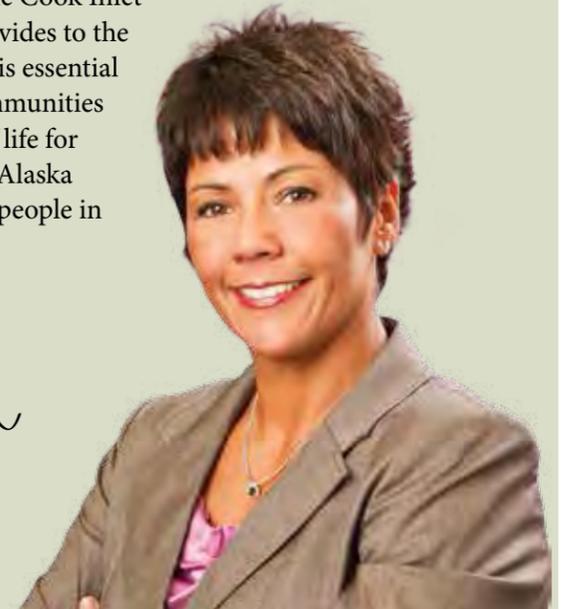

CIRI is proud of the contributions it makes to better our region and the state. And it's not just the corporation with so-called "skin in the game." It's gratifying to see the generosity that CIRI employees express throughout the year.

Each year at CIRI we have an employee-giving campaign to benefit the United Way of Anchorage. Last year, employees contributed nearly $70,000 of their own money to the United Way campaign. With matching funds from the company, CIRI's workplace campaign topped $100,000. And, we're excited to report, the program is growing within our company. In 2012, the participation among CIRI employees grew by 27 percent and total campaign dollars increased by 17 percent. These dollars go directly to important programs within our community – programs such as increasing the high school graduation rate among Anchorage teens. In 2006, the graduation rate was 59 percent. Today, it is 73 percent. We are well on our way to achieving the ambitious goal of 90 percent by 2020!

CIRI employees also participate in a number of volunteer opportunities. These include serving lunch at Beans Café, which provides meals to Anchorage's homeless population; distributing donated food through Cook Inlet Housing Authority's Mobile Food Pantry to senior citizens; supporting the Blood Bank of Alaska; manning phone banks for public radio fund drives and volunteering their time and expertise on various nonprofit boards. In addition, the employees at CIRI's subsidiary companies are involved in numerous other charitable organizations.

We're proud of the corporate citizenship CIRI and its employees display each day. Giving back and sharing is among the traditional values at the core of our cultural heritage as Alaska Natives. Today, CIRI is an integral part of the communities in the Cook Inlet region. The support CIRI provides to the many programs and services is essential to helping build stronger communities and to enhance the quality of life for CIRI shareholders and other Alaska Native and American Indian people in Southcentral Alaska.

The event, which drew close to 150 participants and generous corporate sponsors, once again succeeded not only in making for an enjoyable day for the golfers, but more importantly, raising more than $100,000 for important charities in the Cook Inlet region.

"Organizationally it's a big effort on behalf of CIRI employees and volunteers to pull off this tournament," said Sophie Minich, president and CEO of CIRI. "The team did a great job and, as always, I'm grateful for the wonderful support we received from our friends and businesses in the community."

This year, the CIRI Golf Classic supported three programs with proceeds from the tournament – Covenant House Alaska, Cook Inlet Tribal Council's ARISE program for early education and the new Alaska Native Executive Leadership program at Alaska Pacific University.

"The support we receive from CIRI is critical in helping Covenant House deliver the important services we provide to homeless, runaway and at-risk youth in our community," said Alison Kear, executive director of Covenant House Alaska. "To CIRI and all of the corporate sponsors – a heartfelt thank you from all of us here at Covenant House!"

The CIRI Golf Classic began 30 years ago as an event to raise money for The CIRI Foundation to provide scholarships to CIRI shareholders and lineal descendants. Since its inception, the golf classic has helped dozens of charities throughout the Cook Inlet region.

Our Business

CIRI Spotlight: Robin Summers Murphy

CIRI shareholder Robin Murphy had been teaching in the Anchorage School District for more than 20 years, but it took her sister, Heather, from Pittsburgh, Pa., to ignite the desire to become more involved in her Alaska Native corporation. At the time, Heather Summers sat on one of the CIRI Shareholder Participation Committees. It wasn't long before Robin was tagging along to the meetings, learning more about CIRI and its many business operations.

Robin Summers Murphy

The more Robin learned, the more she wanted to know. Eventually she found herself at the CIRI Shareholder Relations Department, applying to join a Shareholder Participation Committee and filling out the questionnaire.

"It's really a simple process," Murphy said. "The questionnaire requires a little research, but it's a lot easier than people think and the CIRI website is very helpful."

In May of 2013, Robin stepped down as the chairperson of the Alaska Shareholder Participation Committee (there are two other committees, the Anchorage Shareholder Participation Committee and the Lower 48 and Hawaii Shareholder Participation Committee) after serving a three-year term.

"The educational experience of participating on the committee was incredible, and it gave me a lot of pride in being part of my corporation," she said. "I truly enjoyed getting to hear about everything CIRI is involved in and it was a great opportunity to interact with other shareholders, the management team and Board of Directors."

Now in her 25th year with the Anchorage School District, Murphy has taught art at 14 different schools. She is currently the art teacher at Alpenglow and Ravenwood Elementary Schools in Eagle River. In 2000, Robin was recognized as the Art Teacher of the Year for the entire state of Alaska.

Murphy's passion for art and a motivation among committee members to increase the participation of youth in CIRI activities led to the new CIRI Youth Art Contest that was introduced this year. The contest invites shareholders or descendants, 5 to 12 years of age, to submit artwork for a chance at winning prizes.

Robin is Inupiat and inherited her CIRI shares from her grandmother, original shareholder Meta Muller from Teller, who moved to Anchorage in 1964.

In Touch with shareholders

James and Rachel Trascritti

Wedding announcement

CIRI descendant James Trascritti and his wife Rachel Robinson were married June 1 at the Withrow Nature Preserve in Cincinnati, Ohio. Trascritti is the son of CIRI shareholder Dr. Teresa Trascritti and Dr. Fran Trascritti, and the grandson of CIRI shareholder Ernie Watson. The groom's father, Dr. Fran Trascritti, officiated the wedding.

Catherine Maliepaard

Achievement announcement

CIRI shareholder Catherine Maliepaard was awarded her first patent for the invention of a child seat for bicycles. The seat allows children from infancy to a weight limit of 100 pounds to be able to ride with a person. She says that she came up with the idea because her youngest daughter has autism and doesn't know how to pedal yet. Her daughter also exceeded the weight limit for all the bike seats designed for children. According to Maliepaard, "My daughter now enjoys the outside rides. This is my first patent and I am currently working on four more." Maliepaard is the youngest child of CIRI shareholder Ernest Watson and Constanca Cinco.

Shareholder Participation Committee Update

CIRI welcomes the following new members to the Shareholder Participation Committees (SPC):

Alaska SPC Committee

Phyllis Gregory, Madeline Thompson and Diana Zirul

Anchorage SPC Committee

Markel Beach, Charles Campbell, Janet Guerra and Marilyn Lokanin

Lower 48 and Hawaii SPC Committee

Each year, SPC members are chosen through a random drawing from the names of voting shareholders who are at least 18 years of age, and have indicated an interest in participating on a committee and correctly answered the questionnaire about CIRI that is mailed to all voting shareholders prior to the Annual Meeting. The correct answers for the 2013 questionnaire are shown below.

Isaak, Fulton active in Clare to Clare event

CIRI descendants Joel Isaak and Jessica Fulton – both of who were spotlighted in the CIRI newsletter this year – participated in the Clare to Clare fashion show July 27 in Anchorage.

The annual show benefits Clare House, which provides temporary, emergency shelter for women with children and expectant mothers.

The Alaska Native Arts Foundation partnered with Northwest Strategies to feature the Water Collection at the event -- wearable art inspired by the element of water. Isaak, who is known for molding salmon skins and moose hides into works of art, designed a salmon skin dress that was featured in the fashion show.

Miss Alaska Jessica Fulton stays active in the community and for the third year volunteered her pageant skills to model outfits on the runway. Fulton was the first Alaska Native selected to participate in the Miss United States pageant and was selected runner up. The pageant was held in Washington, D.C. during the 4th of July weekend.

You can read more about Fulton in the April 2013 Raven's Circle and Isaak in the March 2013 edition.

TCF selected to manage major donation to support Alaska Native arts and culture

The Alaska Native Heritage Center is a prior TCF project grant recipient. ANHC commissioned Tlingit master woodcarver James Williams to carve the "Cracked Frog," bringing Tlingit tradition, culture and art into a contemporary setting.

As part of a new grantmaking partnership with the Margaret A. Cargill Foundation (MACF), The CIRI Foundation (TCF) has been selected to distribute more than half a million dollars in grants to promote Alaska Native arts and culture.

The partnership will provide TCF with an additional $200,000 per year for three years to promote projects that encourage Alaska Native culture and artistic techniques to be passed down from generation to generation. The funding is also aimed at helping Alaska Native artists hone their business skills.

"It is an incredible honor to be selected for this important initiative," said TCF President and CEO Susan Anderson. "Our team will work hard to ensure we fulfill the intent of this generous gift to benefit our Native heritage and the state of Alaska."

Having celebrated its 31st anniversary in July 2013, TCF is the largest private foundation of its kind serving the needs of Alaska Native people. The foundation provides educational scholarships to original enrollees of CIRI and their lineal descendants, and funds project grants to improve education as well as the area of preservation and perpetuation of the cultural heritage of Alaska Native people. Each year approximately 85 percent of TCF funds are awarded to students pursuing their educational goals and 15 percent is awarded as project grants.

"As a leading philanthropic organization in Alaska, TCF shares goals and interests with its new partner," Anderson said. "Rather than re-invent the wheel, MACF wanted to work with organizations that know the state, are familiar with the culture and have a good understanding of the programs that can most effectively achieve their philanthropic objectives."

The funds from MACF will roughly double the amount TCF is able to award annually in project grants.

A large number of quarterly checks and direct deposit vouchers were returned to CIRI as undeliverable during the second quarter. A list of shareholders who do not have a current mailing address on record is continually updated and located on the CIRI website.

To ensure receipt of CIRI mail – including dividends – shareholders should immediately notify the Shareholder Relations Department of address changes and should also update the address on file with the U.S. Postal Service. If the address on the CIRI records does not match the address on file with the Postal Service, CIRI mail and dividends may be returned as undeliverable. When this occurs CIRI must place the shareholder's records on hold, and any distributions issued in connection with the CIRI shares are held pending receipt of a valid address.

If your address has changed, please send a signed Address Change Form to CIRI and include a current telephone number so CIRI may contact you with any questions. If you fail to notify CIRI of your new address before the deadline, and your check is sent to your old address, CIRI cannot reissue that check to you unless it is either returned to Shareholder Relations or a minimum of 90 days has elapsed. Change of address forms can be mailed to CIRI at P.O. Box 93330, Anchorage, AK 99509, or faxed to (907) 263-5186. All faxed requests should be followed up with a call to confirm the fax was received.

Online forms and information on changing your address or submitting a mail-forwarding request with the U.S. Postal Service are available on the Postal Service website, and are also available at your local post office.

Tax Reminder

As a reminder, dividends represent taxable income to shareholders and portions of the Elders' payments are also taxable. Although CIRI is unable to withhold taxes from distributions, shareholders who anticipate owing tax on their distributions have the option of making quarterly estimated tax payments directly to the IRS. To find out more about applicable federal and state tax requirements or making quarterly estimated tax payments, please consult with a tax advisor or contact the IRS directly.
